CHARCOAL IS DEPLETING FORESTS

In Malawi charcoal is the cheapest source of energy for heating and cooking . However, over dependency on charcoal fuel is stripping the country's natural forests. The government of Malawi and environmental groups are struggling to find altenative forms of energy for heating and cooking inorder to save forests.

Environmentalists argue that charcoal trade is responsible for the loss of 50,000 hectors of natural forests in Malawi. Although charcoal trade is booming, it is illegal in Malawi. However a shift from charcoal to other altenative forms of energy options are very expensive.
