Section A (30 marks)

Answer both questions

1. POETRY

OUR FAULT

The rains come no more
The clouds gather
But winds rush to disperse them

The heat is our companion
The sun bakes the soil
And roast our bodies

We hear of rivers bursting
Hear of nature getting mad and violent
And then likes get lost

We rush to the hills
To appease the ancestors with traditional sweet beer
And plea for mercy and forgiveness

The old guards say to our shock
The ancestors did flee
They cannot liv in the bare mountains

Then again we go home
To wait for the heat to dissipate
Watch the clouds gather

And the routine continues
The winds disperse the clouds
No rains

Hunger again next year
From faraway lands we hear
Thousands of lives have been washed away by rains

We wonder
And cry
Yet we cannot go to the ancestors

They live not in bare mountains
They lodge not in destroyed nature
It is our fault.

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

STREET URCHINS BATTLE FOR A LIVING

The poor will not starve on the fringes while the rich feast, the young boys' reason, and scrounging has been, and will be, their way of living.

The street brigades are the organised gangs of young boys in their teens, who live, sleep, beg, sing, steal, fight, love, hate and harass people, on the streets of a heartless city of Blantyre.

There are about over a thousand of these rubbish boys in Blantyre city. With soot-covered bodies, tattered clothes, bare feet, grubby hands, distracted and hungry looking faces, the street boys have become a permanent feature of Blantyre city centre.

Themuthemu, a 16 year- boy, is a street boys brigade leader, who has earned his position through a dozen street fights and commands nine other gangsters in their teens.

With half of his front teeth missing, knocked out in a brawl with other gangs for a lucrative scavenging territory, Blantyre 1, pseudonymed, has the springy step of a cockish boss. 'How do you expect us to survive?' he asked the team leader for Blantyre social welfare officer, Mrs Kufakuwawa, defensively. 'We pick papers and other valuable, make toys and sell them. That is how we live. We have no homes; we make little dens where we can, sleeping in shop -doorways, railway stations, bus stations, concrete shafts and sewers.

Besides scavenging in dustbins, begging, and cleaning cars for a few coins, B1gang is said to be involved in some anti-social vices like pick-pocketing, shop-lifting, and drug-taking.' That's a lie, we do not do anything like that', another gang member's argued against. And his comrades will not talk or say anything contrary under their boss's hawkish eyes.

All the street boys under that interview tell miserable stories of torture, suffering, and deprivation which drove them from their homes to scratch a living in the urban streets. Many came from subsistence wage-earning families and are barely literate. Njolinjo,TO1`,from Thyolo District, for example, claimed that he left home in 2007 when he was thirteen because his half-brother used to beat him with sham book 'like a dog' and overworked on Tea plantation. I also wanted to look for a job and be independent. But I could not find any because I am not educated.

Perekamoyo, 14 years old left his home because his parents died of HIV and AIDS in 2010 and he did not want to live with any members of his extended family. Another gang member claimed that his parents were working and living on a commercial farm and he was not doing anything, and he decided to sell vegetables, but he stopped when he met some friends in town.

With big cardboard boxes on their backs or dirty plastic bags in their hands, the street brigade boys mingle and jostle with high-heeled secretaries and superb dressed bank workers as they search for 'valuables' in garbage.

The boys share the food, money, and other things they work for and only B1 gets a little more than his friends, because he is the captain.

Mrs Kufakuwawa, a development officer for Children welfare for Blantyre Council said that the council had begun the study of the street brigade children and would like to see them properly rehabilitated.' 'We would like to find out the reasons why the children desert their homes and families. Given time and money, we would look at the best way these children can be resettled and involved in income generating projects. She further stated that many of these street urchins tended to lie when interviewed. They do that if they suspect the motive. They need to trust you to tell the truth. These children must be understood first before anything is said about them, and they also need counselling and their roots have to be established.'-MANA.
